Objectives of the Course	This course aims to enable law faculty students to integrate their theoretical knowledge with the society after four years of study, to be able to evaluate the law with the sociality, to be able to identify the problems of disadvantaged groups in the society within the scope of law, to be able to analyse these problems and to be able to produce solutions and support for them.
Short Course Content	Each academic year, the course is shaped in terms of a social problem and group that the students will take as a subject within the framework of their interest and awareness. The course is shaped by providing a theoretical basis for the relevant problem and then enabling students to observe and encounter facts in the field. In this respect, the necessary coordination with the necessary non-governmental organisations and legal profession organisations is ensured and the active participation of students in these areas is aimed.
